Overview

Jim is Co-Chair of Archer's Condemnation and Eminent Domain Practice. An accomplished trial lawyer, Jim handles all aspects of complex litigation in an array of cases in areas that include condemnation law, natural gas utility law, redevelopment law, environmental law, class actions, mass torts, regulatory investigations, contract disputes, commercial litigation, and employment law.

Unique in that he represents both sides of the issues in all matters, Jim is sensitive to the issues confronting property owners and skilled at ensuring that government entities and other condemnors comply with the complex web of rules and requirements to acquire land. He has represented property owners related to a number of complex valuation issues, obtaining significant increase in compensation over the original offers. Jim has also represented multiple pipeline companies in condemnation proceedings pursuant to the Natural Gas Act. In addition, Jim has represented multiple municipalities in acquiring property via eminent domain for public projects. He has also represented governmental authorities in condemnation proceedings pursuant to the New Jersey Urban Redevelopment Act and the Abandoned Properties Rehabilitation Act involving numerous properties for large-scale urban redevelopment project.

As a second-generation lawyer, Jim has an instinct for evaluating risk accurately and shaping creative strategies to defend his clients' interests with increased efficiency. His ability to see both sides of the issue makes him effective both at advocating for clients and resolving issues when possible. Representing clients throughout the country, Jim conducts trials, argues motions, pursues discovery, conducts depositions, performs investigations and participates in alternative dispute resolution processes. In every instance, Jim's primary concern is learning what is most important to his clients, and understanding their needs and goals. A results-oriented attorney, Jim works with his clients to analyze their claims or defenses, apply sound legal principals, and determine the best way to proceed, whether it be early attempts to settle or formulating a litigation strategy that both maximizes recovery, while minimizing risks, costs and expenses.

Clients enjoy working with Jim. In all his cases, Jim believes that clear and prompt communication and making the client an engaged part of the team is the key to success. He works hard to ensure that his clients feel heard and their needs are properly met. Working with Jim, a client will never wonder what is going on with their case. He knows the importance of sharing his knowledge and experience in a way that ensures his clients are comfortable and informed at every stage.
