Eric Yun is an attorney with a diverse, cross-disciplinary practice encompassing litigation and immigration. As a litigator, Eric has extensive experience in a wide array of commercial and other complex civil litigation matters, including breach of contract actions, shareholder/partnership disputes, fraud and other business tort actions, as well as employment discrimination actions, complex product liability and other high value personal injury and property loss matters. He has represented clients in finance and banking, consumer products, accounting, automotive and heavy industrial manufacturing, retail, and many other industries. Eric's practice encompasses all trial-level issues, as well as pre-litigation investigations and negotiations, preventive counseling on contract drafting, regulatory compliance and other related matters, arbitration/alternative dispute resolution proceedings and appellate matters in both State and Federal courts. Additionally, as part of Archer's Immigration and Global Mobility team, Eric represents employers and individuals engaged in commerce in the United States, bringing his litigation expertise to bear upon immigration/visa applications and disputes.

Eric received his undergraduate degree from Princeton University and his law degree from the Georgetown University Law Center. During law school, Eric was a Legal Intern at the United States Department of Justice Criminal Division, Public Integrity Section.
