

NJ Can Teach Washington When It Comes to Police Use of Force | Opinion

Articles

03.09.2026

By: Anthony C. Talarico

In an opinion piece written for NorthJersey.com, partner Anthony Talarico writes that as Washington debates new federal standards for immigration enforcement and police use of force, policymakers should look to New Jersey as a model for reform. Anthony explains that clear use-of-force guidelines, robust de-escalation training, and widespread use of body-worn cameras have helped New Jersey improve transparency and public trust while maintaining officer safety. As Congress considers new accountability measures, he suggests New Jersey's approach offers a practical blueprint for balancing effective law enforcement with the public's demand for transparency and responsible use of force.

Click here to read the full opinion piece.

Related People

Anthony C. Talarico

Partner

✉ atararico@archerlaw.com

☎ 201.498.8541