Archer is pleased to announce that Alice M. Shanahan has joined the firm as a partner in its Environmental Law Practice Group in the firm's Hackensack office. Her addition to Archer's northern New Jersey office gives the firm's already outstanding Environmental Practice a stronger foothold across both New Jersey and New York.

Alice brings more than two decades of experience advising clients on complex environmental, regulatory, transactional, and redevelopment matters. She represents a diverse client base, including Fortune 500 energy, oil and gas, and chemical companies, on high-stakes environmental issues and sites, liability management, and transactions involving contaminated properties.

"We are thrilled to welcome Alice to Archer," said Marc Rollo, President of Archer and Chair of the firm's Environmental Law Group. "Alice brings a wealth of environmental regulatory and transactional experience in complex matters and will fit seamlessly into our practice. We take great pride in the sophisticated work handled by our environmental team of more than 20 attorneys. Alice's experience representing some of the same longstanding clients as Archer further reinforces that foundation. Based in our Hackensack office, she will enhance the firm's presence and capabilities in the environmental field across northern New Jersey and New York."

Alice has served on secondment as environmental counsel to a Fortune 50 petroleum company, supporting environmental compliance, risk management, and regulatory matters across the corporation's Midwest Region. She also collaborated alongside Archer attorneys on several matters over many years.

Her practice spans all phases of environmental matters, from regulatory compliance and site investigation to remediation, risk assessment, and redevelopment of impacted properties. She also advises on environmental aspects of corporate and real estate transactions, including due diligence, site assessments, and allocation of environmental liability.

"I was drawn to Archer because of its deep bench of highly regarded environmental attorneys," Alice said. "I am excited to collaborate with such a respected team. Having worked alongside Archer attorneys periodically throughout my career, I have long admired the firm's work and its strong client relationships. I look forward to building further on those connections together."
