

Personal Injury

Overview

Personal injury cases can be complex and very challenging to pursue. Archer's Personal Injury Group is recognized for its broad experience in personal injury litigation, including cases involving medical malpractice, automobile accidents, product defects, toxic tort and environmental exposure, and drug and medical device issues. Representing individuals and institutions, the group's attorneys have extensive trial and appellate experience in federal and state courts in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Among the group's members is a Certified Civil Trial Attorney, and the paralegal staff includes experienced insurance adjusters, licensed private detectives and nursing personnel.

Serving as counsel for plaintiffs and defendants has given the team's attorneys the advantage of seeing personal injury cases from the perspective of both sides. This experience allows us to develop and successfully execute trial strategy and tactics and deliver favorable results to our clients. Ours is a personal approach to each case based on each client's particular circumstances, needs and priorities. Knowing that we are meeting clients at an emotional and challenging period in their lives, our group offers the understanding and compassion they need. We provide a dedicated support system over the duration of your case, guiding you through each and every obstacle ahead.

With our focus on personal injury law, we are committed to keeping up-to-date with relevant case law, cutting-edge medical research, and developing connections within related sectors. We know how to handle unexpected issues and use our network of medical experts to great effect.
