

Energy & Utilities

Overview

Companies in the energy and utility industries face unique challenges and opportunities. There is a growing demand for new and renewable energy sources while there is the continuing critical need to efficiently manage existing resources for reliability. Aging infrastructure must be improved as new technologies develop. In this environment, regulatory experience is a critical component in the existing operating infrastructure and in developing new energy projects. Backed by years of in-depth industry experience, we combine specific knowledge and experience in this field with seamless collaboration across jurisdictions and practice areas.

The Energy and Utilities Group of Archer and Archer Public Affairs is among the most active in the Mid-Atlantic region, representing clients in all aspects of energy and utility operations and infrastructure development. We offer administrative, regulatory, project development, and transactional counseling. For decades, our attorneys have represented and advised regulated public utilities, generation companies, renewable energy developers, municipalities and municipal authorities, corporations and financiers, and advocated to federal, state and local officials on their behalf.
