

Hospitality

Overview

Archer represents clients in the hospitality industry, including:

- Hotel owners
- Hotel and hospitality developers
- Hotel management companies
- Restaurant operators
- Individuals and businesses in the goods and services industry

Archer helps clients in the hospitality industry with a range of legal issues, including the purchase and sale of new property to grow their business, as well as equity and debt financing and securities that can provide the capital to grow and thrive. Management and franchise agreements, as well as restaurant and rental leasing agreements are important in the hotel and food service industries, and we regularly draft and review these agreements to protect clients' legal interests. We also assist clients in structuring their organization in a manner that best protects their assets and insulates them from legal liability.

If you are entering into a joint venture or launching a new development or construction project, our hospitality, corporate, tax, litigation and real estate lawyers combine their collective talents to provide advice and guidance. Our multi-disciplinary approach provides clients with the legal support they need for any issue that may arise. If litigation is necessary, our litigation attorneys work to resolve disputes quickly out of court if possible, but we also advocate aggressively if the case proceeds to trial.
