Press Releases

12.06.2007

Anthony R. Caruso, Esquire, a partner in the Princeton office of the law firm Archer, P.C. will moderate the 2007 Princeton University Symposium panel being held Friday, December 7, 2007 at 2pm on the University campus. The panel will discuss various issues confronting the high profile athlete/celebrity in today's fast paced media markets.

The Princeton Sports Symposium brings together the most knowledgeable and successful people in the sports and entertainment business to discuss various aspects and trends in the industry. The event will provide insight into the sports entertainment business as well as to learn from and network with some of the top professionals in the field.

Mr. Caruso is the chair of the firm's Sports and Entertainment Law practice. Most recently, Mr. Caruso gained international attention in his representation of Miss New Jersey, Amy Polumbo. He provided legal counsel, media consulting and crisis management, appearing before the media in a matter involving blackmail that threatened to strip Ms. Polumbo of her crown over Internet photos. The matter was ultimately resolved in Ms. Polumbo's favor.

In addition to sports and entertainment law, he focus his practice in the areas of corporate and commercial transactions. His significant experience in the Sports and Entertainment industry involves providing legal counsel and business strategy and planning to both individuals and companies. In this capacity, he represents artists, professional coaches and athletes, musicians, and various other talent, as well as video/film and television production entities and investment groups involved in sports and entertainment projects.
