Carlos M. Bollar, a Partner with the law firm of Archer, spoke on diversity in the legal profession during a professional development symposium last weekend at Rutgers School of Law-Camden in Camden, N.J.

Bollar, who works in Archer's Haddonfield, N.J., office, participated in a panel discussion titled "Diversity Matters" during the Spring Semester Private Practice Professional Development Symposium, held Saturday, Jan. 26, at the law school. The panel discussed the importance of diversity and what employers are doing to improve diversity hiring and retention.

Bollar, of Mount Laurel, N.J., is a member of the Diversity Committee at Archer and a member of the Board of Directors of the Philadelphia Diversity Law Group, which promotes diversity in the practice of law, particularly in the greater Philadelphia area.

"Improving diversity has become an important issue in the legal profession," Bollar said, noting, "Archer is committed to fostering diversity in the firm and has made it a priority to recruit, develop and retain qualified diverse candidates."

The symposium was presented by Rutgers-Camden's Office of Career Planning & Professional Development and co-sponsored by the Hispanic Bar Association of New Jersey and the Women's Law Caucus at Rutgers-Camden.

A 1994 graduate of Rutgers University and 1997 graduate of Rutgers-Camden Law School, Bollar is a member of Archer's Environmental Litigation practice group. He has substantial experience in litigating complex civil matters in New Jersey and Pennsylvania state and federal courts.
