

Eric Dakhari Lectures on Medical Malpractice at N.J. Association for Justice Conference

Press Releases

05.31.2011

Attorney Eric D. Dakhari of Archer P.C. delivered a lecture on medical malpractice law as part of a continuing legal education (CLE) seminar at the New Jersey Association for Justice's annual Boardwalk Seminar last month in Atlantic City, N.J.

Mr. Dakhari, an Associate in the Firm's Medical & Personal Injury Services Practice Group, spoke to fellow attorneys on "The Affidavit of Merit Statute: Selecting Qualified Experts." Affidavit of Merit statutes require someone who sues a medical professional for malpractice to provide a sworn statement from an expert in the relevant field stating there is a reasonable probability that the conduct of the professional being sued deviated from accepted standards.

Mr. Dakhari concentrates his practice on personal injury litigation in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. His experience includes participation in cases resulting in multi-million settlements, including a case on behalf of a client that suffered severe intestinal injury from a delayed diagnosis, and a case on behalf of a client injured in a firearms accident.

The New Jersey Association for Justice (NJAJ) is a statewide association of legal professionals and law students that works to preserve and strengthen laws for safer products and workplaces, a cleaner environment and quality health care. The NJAJ provides ongoing legal education to attorneys and educates consumers about their rights under the law.
