The Rutgers University-Camden Alumni Association (RUCAA) recently honored Archer attorney Jennie A. Owens with the Frank Fulbrook Award for Community Service. The Frank Fulbrook RUCAA Community Service Award recognizes those who exemplify the dedicated community service of Alumnus Frank J. Fulbrook to RUCAA, and who have impacted their communities, touching the lives of others through their service. Frank Fulbrook was a community activist and volunteer for RUCAA, and was one of Camden County's most relentless civic activists, fighting for what he believed was in the best interests for Camden residents and businesses.

Ms. Owens is a member of Archer's Family and Matrimonial Practice Group and represents clients in all aspects of family law, including divorce, custody, support, domestic violence, and adoption. She graduated from Rutgers-Camden in 2003 with her undergraduate degree in Political Science, and from Rutgers Law School in 2006. At Rutgers, she had previously served as president of the Honors College Alumni Association, and is an active alumna in general. More recently, she served a term on the Rutgers University Senate as an alumni representative and also served on the executive board.

Ms. Owens is a master member of the Thomas S. Forkin Family Law American Inn of Court and serves as its Treasurer. She also is Chair of the American Inns of Court Program Library Task Force. Additionally, Ms. Owens is currently serving a five-year term as a Commissioner of the Camden County Library System. As a resident of Camden County, she was appointed by the Camden County Freeholders, and this past year was installed as the Vice President of the Commission. The Board is responsible for determining the policies that govern the operation and programs of the Camden County Library System.
