

Biden Administration Announces Plan to Rescind Travel Bans

Client Advisories

09.21.2021

On September 20, 2021, the White House announced its plans to rescind the COVID-19 travel restrictions that have been impacting travel to the United States since March 2020. Specifically, in early November, the Administration will rescind the geographic restrictions impacting individuals entering the United States from China, Iran, the Schengen Area, the U.K., Ireland, Brazil, South Africa, and India. Instead, the Administration will require individuals to provide proof that they have been fully vaccinated against COVID-19, as well as provide proof of a negative COVID-19 test within three (3) days of their flight to the United States. The CDC will be charged with providing the list of acceptable vaccines. Exceptions to this new vaccination requirement will be narrow and will require agreement to obtain the vaccination upon arrival to the United States.

The rescission of these travel restrictions will also negate the current requirements for travelers not exempted from the current travel bans, to obtain National Interest Exceptions ("NIEs") at the applicable U.S. Embassy and/or Consulate. How these changes will impact current delays and backlogs at U.S. Embassies and Consulates across the globe is yet to be seen, as many are still only operating at partial capacity.
